on the goods is just five cents a yard. [Cheers.] The price of bar iron abroad and here, the price of steel rails in England and America, was guoted, and the President's theory of the tariff was shown to be all wrong.

When a man who claims to be a tariff reformer says the tariff is a tax, said Mr. Dalzeli, I know he is a Free Trader at heart, and all his denials count for nothing. [Cheers.]

The important fact that under a protective tariff steel rails are not only cheaper than they were when on the free list, but that they are also made here and give employment to American workmen, was shown in a way which aronsed the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm. The Pertinent Question asked by Hon John Dalzell-The Free Traders Routed by an Eloquent Advocate of American Labor. enthusiasm.

The Republican meeting at the Opera House last night was not so well attended as it would have been had the weather been less unpleasant, or had there not been another Republican meeting in the south end of the city. Still, it was a nice audience to talk Tariff to. There were a good many workingmen and a few ladies present. The audience nearly filled the house, and it grow steadily until near the close. A more responsive crowd could not be gathered.

Mr. Charles Wingerter called the meeting to order on behalf of the County Committee, and named Mr. B. F. Caldwell as chairman. Mr. Caldwell was received with enthusiasm and when after a merely formal introduction, the orator of the evening, Hon. John Dalzell, advanced, the applause broke out again with increased vigor.

The audiences which have assembled at the last few meetings of the Republicans are encouraging. The number of Democrats who haye been at all of them is large, and these gentlemen are evidently present because they are interested in the subject of sait, also, Mr. Dalzell is difficulty and the subject of sait, also, Mr. Dalzell is deprived and the last alt sold in Chicago at $5 a barrel, while now it is $1, and in Michigan 60 cents a barrel, with the when on the free list salt sold in Chicago at $5 a barrel, while now it is $1, and in Michigan 60 cents a barrel, with the when on the free list salt sold in Chicago at $5 a barrel, while now it is $1, and in Michigan 60 cents a barrel, with the abarrel thrown in. THE MILLS BILL.

me. Dalzell's speech.

He first referred to Pennsylvania's custom of giving big Republican majorities. This evoked cheers. He referred to this, he said, hecause he saw no difference between West Virginia and Pennsylvania. The latter's ores were no richer, her forests no thicker, her mills and factories no more thriving, her farmers no more prosperous. Anything, therefore, which affected Pennsylvania must affect West Virginia in the same manner.

Going into the subject of the treasury surplus, he showed that the present year's appropriations would leave not over 17,000,000 of a surplus, and suggested that if a Democratic administration were to be returned to power, there would be no surplus at all at the end of the current year. [Applause.]

Why were the President's figures so far wrong? One reason was that the expenses of Grover Cleveland's administration have been grossly larger than those of Chester A. Arthur's, and Mr. Arthur was not elected as a "reform" President, either. [Applause.] In the years of Cleveland's administration there have been 700 new offices created, and the expenses for salaries alone have increased about $900,000.

When Grover Cleveland came into power there were bonds bearing intercessed about $900,000.

When Grover Cleveland came into power there were bonds bearing intercessed about $900,000.

Alternative the surplus in the treasury. Would any business men allow debts to remain as an interest charge upon him, while his bank account was growing? This is just what Grover Cleveland did. [Applause.] A resolution was passed making it obligatory upon the President to expend the surplus in the payment of bonds, and the President, knowing Congress to be about to adjourn, put the resolution in his pocket and treated it to a

St. 300,000 to collect in ternal taxation in all ages and in all periods of this country's history, and the rarity of such a tax in American history, were shown. The good record of the Republican party in reducing taxation since the war, and the poor record of the Democrats in the same time, was also forcibly portrayed. He fayored taking the tax off alcohol used in the arts, because it enters largely into the necessaries of life, and increases their cost necessarily. It is a direct tax, an unnecessary tax, a burdensoms tax, their cost necessarily. It is a direct tax, an unnecessary tax, a burdensoms tax, and ought to be abolished. (Cheers.)

Mr. Dalzell said no Democrat could scare him with the cry of "free whisky."

VAN BAKER'S OWN STORY

Of the Murder of his Wife and Mother-in-Law

FINISHED AT WELLSBURG.

Merciless Cross Examination by Mr. McSweeny, but the Prisoner Remains Cool under it all.

At Wellsburg yesterday in the Baker murder trial most of the day was occupied by the cross-examination of Van Baker, the defendant. On Monday afternoon, in his direct testimony, the prisoner accounted for the spots on his clothing, alleged by the experts to be blood spots, by saying they were caused by iron rust from the floor of the cell in which he was confined after his arrest. The balance of his evidence did not differ materially from that given in his first examination. He was cross-examined by McSweeney.

ined by McSweeney.

A long discussion occurred between counsel regarding whether McSweeney's style of cross-examination was according to the proper methods. Mr. McSweeney said he was willing to be governed by the decision of the court.

The court said that counsel might ask him if he had testified so and so and if the witness was shown the paper from which he was reading. That he was in effect introducing a paper in evidence without allowing the other side to see contents of paper or offer any objection to its introduction.

Baker detailed at length the transaction with the strange men who called at Baker detailed at length the transaction with the strange men who called at the house to rent the stable—up to the point where one of them offered a fifty dollar bill. He said: One of the men was very talkative, one ordinarily so, and one never spoke at all; when we came back to the house my wife spoke, and said, "I suppose you are ready to pay some money;" two of the men made a motion to pay, one more demonstrative than the other; one of them pulled out a roll of money and ran off a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill; he said "can you change a fifty dollar bill to my lap; think I was bitting and said, "yes, sir, think I can;" either took the bill in my hand or laid it on my lap; think I was sitting and my wife looked over my shoulder; was either standing or sitting, am not sure which.

Q.—You have said that you told them the first intention of going to Beaver, Pa., try was cited to show the advantages arising from Protection. THE MILLS HILL.

The practical side of Protectiou, and the way in which its benefits flow to the farmer distant from manufacturing centres, to the merchant, to everybody in the land, was most eloquently shown. Then said Mr. Dalzell:

Oh, but I would like to see West Virginia come fout from the Solid South [Wild applause] to take her place where she belongs, among the richest and most prosperous States of the Union. [Cheering.] When the grand Protection column takes up its march to Washington [Applause] I should like to see West Virginia on the right of theline. [Great and continued applause.]

He showed signs of stopping once or twice, but the audience would not let him, and the fraudulent pretensions of the Free Trade Mills bill were amusingly shown up. Never was that poor measure more completely and conclusively shown to be unwisely framed, bad in its effects and put forth uader false protesses than by Mr. Dalzell. The of my lap; think I was sitting and my wife looked over my shoulder; was either standing or sitting, am not sure the bill was good. How carefully did you examine that bill.

A.—Did not examine it long; could let la sa much about it in a few seconds inspection as an hour's. Can't tell what rostion Mrs. McWha was in at that time; heard her in the room; would infer that she was near the kitchen door; it in ever saw her lying down on the floor; it don't think I ever gave any different account from this; it must have been the same in substance; I might have said at at former trial that my wife asked me if the bill was good when it was handed to her.

Mr. Cook objected on the ground that Mr. McSweeney was reading from a paper.

Mr. McSweeny said, "let's fight this on there." To the court—I claim that I was a perfect right to refresh my memory by any paper which I choose. The memory of man is finite, and I make no occalment of the fact that I refresh my memory with the stenographer's notes.

Mr. Cook baid there was no reason why Mr. McSweeny should parade his fair the show there was no reason why Mr. McSweeny should parade his fair the show there was no reason why Mr. McSweeny should parade his fair the show there was no reason why Mr. McSweeny should parade his fair the should be sh

War will most probably be wared against the proposed new corporate limits of Menndayllio, and the control of certain individuals and the taking into land which cannot be used for municipal purposes. The present plan isto have the next Legislature repeal the charter of the town and then to ask for a re-incorporation co-extensive with the new line. This will of necessity be very expensive. The moment the present charter is repealed the streets and alleys and other public grounds now used for municipal purposes will rever to the respective property owners. In case of a re-incorporation the land for streets and alleys and other purposes will have to be purchased, unless it be dedicated by its owners, and there is little hope of that. The corporate limits ought to be extended, but it is should be done in a spirit of fairness to all.
